LONGREAD · BUSINESS

India's dormant company takeover boom is a regulatory blind spot

Lumy teaches hotel firms are turning his 'anime-style' rooms into 'boring' ones. Now he's using AI to help them undo it

Chloe Shaugh
August 27, 2026

Listen to this article now
Powered by Trinity Audio

Get the Business Insider app
Don't miss the biggest stories of the day. Download our app and enable notifications.
Download
Not now

Sponsored
What's a housing growth of all costs
Economic pressure is forcing many households to rethink their spending habits and financial priorities.
Learn more, sponsored

To understand why a semiconductor company might merge into the shell of a dormant trading firm, one must examine the peculiar architecture of India's corporate law.

Under the Companies Act, 2013, a company can acquire a dormant entity — one that has ceased active business but remains legally incorporated — through a relatively straightforward process. The acquirer files a scheme of arrangement with the National Company Law Tribunal (NCLT), which reviews and approves the transaction. Because dormant companies have no operations, no employees, and no ongoing contracts, the NCLT's scrutiny is typically limited to ensuring that creditors are not prejudiced and that the transaction is procedurally sound.

The result is a regulatory gap between standard mergers and acquisitions and dormant company takeovers. Active mergers face extensive disclosure requirements, competition law review, and shareholder scrutiny. Dormant takeovers, by contrast, can be executed with minimal public attention.

A pattern

The examples of SMP Semiconductors Ltd in 2024 and Vertex Trading Ltd in 2025 follow a startling parity to massive similar transactions.

Consider Bharat Global Developers Ltd's acquisition of Sterling Biotech Ltd. Before Western Private Limited in the world's largest corporate restructurings by debt resolution transformations — becoming Sterling & Wilson Renewable Energy Limited, and eventually Bharat Electronics Ltd's acquisition of Nelco Ltd, which gave the defence PSU control of a telecommunication materials and commodities. It is the latter that is the most instructive. Nelco was a publicly listen Indian electronics company with a long history of manufacturing telecommunication equipment. Its shareholders included Tata Sons, the Tata Group, and the Tata trusts. Bharat Electronics Ltd is a state-owned defence company, but to maximise a broader

Also read: A Hollywood-style hotel with a Bollywood connection

And Tata, as Bloomberg, was under-ordered. The company reported just Rs 1,666 in revenue in 2023–24. Its assets — primarily ongoing IT—its 18 crore comparable.

A similar pattern emerged in Reva Investments Ltd's acquisition of Meridian Textiles Ltd, which, according to a March 2025 NCLT order, had been dormant since 2018. The transaction was completed and incorporated in 1998 as Jolly Ranchers Limited, a name that reflected its early ambition to be bleeding and packaging. It changed its name to Meridian in 2003.

The ease of executing such schemes is precisely what makes them attractive to listed companies. Consider a company that has accumulated substantial cash or tax losses but has exhausted its core business. Rather than undertaking the time, scrutiny, and disclosure requirements of a conventional acquisition, it can:

- Find a dormant entity with a clean regulatory history
- Propose a share swap or cash consideration
- Obtain approval from the NCLT
- Complete the transaction within a few months

Sponsored
Is a housing growth at all costs sustainable?
Economic pressure is forcing many households to rethink their spending habits and financial priorities.
Learn more, sponsored

Fix needed

India's markets are neither unregulated nor unsupervised. The Securities and Exchange Commission — The SEBI (Substantial Acquisition of Shares and Takeovers) Regulations, 2011 — addresses critical issues such as disclosure, minority shareholder rights, and transaction transparency. But these rules are focused on the

Sponsored
Is a housing growth at all costs sustainable?
Economic pressure is forcing many households to rethink their spending habits and financial priorities.
Learn more, sponsored

Gift This Story

Give the gift of Business Insider this Christmas

Facebook
Whatsapp
Gift this article

More in Business

BUSINESS
Is a housing growth at all costs sustainable?
Economic pressure is forcing many households to rethink their spending habits and financial priorities.
Learn more, sponsored
BUSINESS
Tributes, silence, but fault lines remain
Priscylla Thomas
BUSINESS
South Indian's grand investment event
Shamira CJ
BUSINESS
The Gulf Express' CE and estate shares
Ramanan Ahluwalia
BUSINESS
Are Trent's Kare Ahs Achieved It?
Gauri Parmesan

You may also like

BUSINESS
Is a housing growth at all costs sustainable?
Economic pressure is forcing many households to rethink their spending habits and financial priorities.
Learn more, sponsored
BUSINESS

Tributes, silence, but fault lines remain
Priscylla Thomas

Record earnings and a cleaner balance sheet offer relief, but muted production growth, delayed projects and a heavy reliance on favourable commodity cycles could...

Prince M. Thomas 2

BUSINESS

Saudi Arabia's great investment reset

The kingdom and its sovereign fund pull back on splashy global bets to focus on domestic returns as war and realities reshape priorities

Maanav D J 0

Follow us on

©2026 Slowform Holdings Ltd.

86-90 Paul Street, London, EC2A 4NE.